Bridal ballad.

By Jerome Cochran.

Now the holy rite is spoken,
Bridal vows are pledged now,
Brightly gleams the golden token,
Love's fond wreath is on thy brow.
Earth to thy full heart is an Aiden,
Free from sorrow's dark alloy,
Hope, a Peri pleasure-laden,
Singing only songs of joy.

Love's bright flame by angels tended,
Burneth in thy bosom now,
And thy life with his is blended
Who hath won thy virgin vow.
Lady, may no baleful shadow,
Flung from sorrow's raven wing,
Dim the blissful Eldorado,
Life hath found from Love to spring.

Free from cloud of care or sadness
Be thy days of after-life;
And thy songs of peace and gladness
But the fierce and selfish strife,
Which within the heart's deep ocean
When the tides of passion swell,
Rages with a wild commotion.
Love alone on earth can quell.

May, O may you never waken
From the rapture of your dream:
By the bright hope unforsaken,
Lighted by the brilliant beam
Flashing from the constellation
Which to Love we sacred deem;
May thy joys in reservation
Be as bright as now they seem.

Be no homed vow unspoken,
Sacred still the mystic Dove,
And the golden dove unbroken
At the fountain of true love.
Angel-watchers guard and guide thee
Through this life of mortal birth,
Faithful friends be e'er beside thee
In thy pilgrimage on earth.

Love and Truth attend thee ever—
Happiness and grace divine,
And the demon Care, blight never
Fair hope or wish of thine.
When shall end this life probation,
Betwixt man above the skies,
Free from sin and sin's temptation,
From the Lord of Paradise.

COMMENTS.

Beauties of the morning.

The following beautiful extract is from a familiar letter written by Mr. Webster while in Virginia, a few years since to a friend in Boston. The extract is one of the most striking descriptions of the beauties of the morning which we have ever read, and is an additional evidence of the varied accomplishments of the great statesman:

5 o'clock A. M. Richmond, }
April 20, 1847. }

This city has a "pleasant seat." It is high. The James river runs below it, and when I went out, an hour, nothing was heard but the roar of the Falls. The air is tranquil, and its temperature mild. It is morning, and a morning sweet, fresh and delightful. Every body knows the morning, in its metaphorical sense, applied to so many objects and on so many occasions. The health, strength and beauty of early years, led us to call that period the morning of life. Of a lovely woman we say she is "bright as the morning," and no one doubts why Lucifer is called the son of the morning.

But the morning itself, few people, inhabitants of cities, know anything about. Among all our good people not one in a thousand sees the sun rise once a year. They know nothing of the morning. Their idea of it is, that it is that part of the morning which comes after a cup of coffee and a beef steak, or a piece of toast. With them morning is not a issuing of light, a new bursting forth of the sun, a new waking up of all that has life, from a sort of temporary death, to behold again the works of God, the heavens and the earth; it is only a part of the domestic day, belonging to breakfast, to reading newspapers, answering notes, sending children to school, and giving orders for dinner. The first streak of light, the earliest purpling of the east, which the lark springs up to greet, and the deeper and deeper coloring into orange and red, till at length the glorious sun is seen regent of the day,—this they never enjoy, for they never see it.

Beautiful descriptions of the "morning" abound in every language, but they are strongest, perhaps, in those of the East, where the sun is often an object of worship.

King David speaks of taking to himself the wings of the morning. This is highly poetical and beautiful. The wings of the morning are the beams of the rising sun. Rays of light are wings. It is thus said that the sun of righteousness shall arise "with healing in his wings"—a rising sun which shall scatter life, and health, and joy throughout the universe.

Milton has fine descriptions of morning but not so many as Shakespeare, from whose writings, pages of the most beautiful imagery, all founded on the glory of the morning, might be filled.

I never thought that Adam had much the advantage of us, from having seen the world while it was new.

The manifestations of the power of God, like His mercies, are "new every morning," and fresh every moment.

We see as fine risings of the sun as ever Adam saw, and its risings are as much a miracle now as they were in his day, and I think a good deal more, because it is now a part of the miracle that for thousands and thousands of years he has come to his appointed time without the variation of a millionth part of a second. Adam could not tell how this would be. I know the morning—I am acquainted with it, and I love it. I love it, fresh and sweet as it is—a daily new creation, breaking forth, and calling all that have life, and breath, and being, to new adoration, new enjoyments and new gratitude.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

THE TOWN MEETING, License or no license.

By Ex-Governor Briggs, of Mass.

At a meeting in Pennsylvania, the question once came up whether any person should be licensed to sell rum. The clergymen, the deacon and physician, strange as it may now appear, all favored it. One man only spoke against it, because of the mischief it did. The question was about to be put, when, all at once, there arose from one corner of the room, a miserable female. She was thinly clad, and her appearance indicated the utmost wretchedness and that her mortal career was almost closed. After a moment of silence, and all eyes being fixed upon her, she stretched her attenuated body to its utmost height, and then her long arms to their greatest length, and raising her voice to a shrill pitch, she called to all to look upon her.

"Yes," she said, "look upon me and then hear me. All that the last speaker has said relative to temperate drinking, as being the father of drunkenness, is true. All practice, all experience declare its truth. All drinking of alcoholic poison, as a beverage, in health, is cessa. Look upon me. You all know me, or once did. You all know I was once the mistress of the best firm in the town. You all know, too, I had one of the best—the most devoted of husbands. You all know I had five noble-hearted, industrious boys, WHERE ARE THEY NOW? Doctor, where are they now? You all know. You all know they lie in a row, side by side, in yonder church-yard; all—every one of them FILLING THE DRUNKARD'S GRAVE! They were all taught to believe that temperate drinking was safe, excess alone ought to be avoided; and they never acknowledged excess. They quoted you, and you, and you," pointing with her shred of a finger to the Priest, Deacon and Doctor, as authority. "They thought themselves safe under such teachers. But I saw the gradual change coming over my family and prospects, with dismay and horror; I felt we were all to be overwhelmed in one common ruin—I tried to ward off the blow, I tried to break the spell, the delusive spell—in which the idea of the benefits of temperate drinking had involved my husband and sons. I begged, I prayed, but the odds were against me. The MINISTER said the poison was a good creature of God; the Deacon (who sits under the pulpit there, and took our FARM TO PAY HIS RUM BILLS) sold them the poison; the Doctor said that a little was good, and excess ought to be avoided. My poor husband, and my dear boys fell into the snare, and they could not escape, and, one after another, were conveyed to the sorrowful grave of the drunkard. Now look at me again. You probably see me for the last time—my sand has almost run—I have dragged my exhausted frame from my present home—your poor house—to warn you all—to warn you, Deacon! to warn you, false teachers of God's word!" and with her arms high flung, and her tall form stretched to its utmost, and her voice raised to an unearthly pitch—she exclaimed:

"I shall soon stand before the judgment seat of God—I shall meet you there, you false guides, and be a witness against you all!"

The miserable female vanished—a dead silence pervaded the assembly—the Priest, Deacon and Physician hung their heads—and when the president of the meeting put the question, "Shall any License be granted for the sale of Spirituous liquors?" the response was unanimous—"No!"

The New York Crystal Palace fair is postponed till the spring of 1853. This project drags very heavily.

BRANDRETH PILLS.

ON the eighteenth of May, 1835, these now truly celebrated Pills were first made known in the UNITED STATES, although in Europe they had been previously before the public nearly a century. The American public naturally viewed them with suspicion but as on trial they were found what they professed, it was soon displaced by the greatest confidence. They have secured this character, too, under very adverse circumstances, having to contend with the base slanders promulgated by those interested in keeping mankind in a state of error as regards the functions of their bodies. Time or climate affects them not, provided they are kept dry.
